CULTURAL NOTE.

Plant in well drained soil in full sun, by just barely covering the rhizomes. Bone meal and powdered gypsum are excellent fertilizers; well rotted manure may also be used but must be kept from contact with the rhizomes. The variegata types do best in a soil rich in humus (these are the yellows are yellow with other colors). Keep free of weeds and dead foliage.

There are altogether 700 or more varieties in my Garden, many of the varieties not listed, in too small quantities to warrant doing so. As stock of these become available, they will be added to above list. Many of these are the choice new kinds from abroad and from American originators. My collection is especially strong in American varieties.

PEONIES.

CULTURAL NOTE.

They are not particular as to soil, except that manure be kept away from the crowns. Soil should be deeply dug, well pulverized and fertilized with well rotted manure or bone meal. Plant three feet apart with "eyes" not deeper than two inches, allowing for settling of the soil. Keep free of weeds and grass.
